

SKYREALMS of Jorune

Geographical spread of species

By Sholari James

While Jorune once belonged to the shanta, the now elusive race has had to give way for the other intelligent species that now share their world. Physiology, history and geography have determined where these different species have settled. Some prefer the tropical climes, while others prefer the wet bog and marshes. Some spread like wildfire while others propagate only slowly. Wars, persecutions, threatening neighbours or the original shantic hunters drove some species to secluded areas where they would be left along to live out their days.

Today however, most species are in collision courses with each other. The two main fractions being the ramian and the human races, whom both have a great appetite for conquest.

The Species Maps below give a good overview of where the various intelligent species can be found, except shantas – who seem to be found nowhere and everywhere). More details of a certain species and its territories can be found in the various essays linked to them, such as Salu Sailors, Blount Bogs and Spread of Humanity on Jorune.
